Resolved, That it is the sence of this meeting of the citizens of Richmond, without distinction of party, class, or religiou:

1. That while the principle of associated effort on the part either of capital or labor for mutual protection and advantage is legitimate and useful, and should be fostered and extended in practical application for the accomplishment of lawful objects by lawful means, it is to be reprehended and rebuked when perverted and misapplied to the accomplishment of unlawful objects by unlawful means, or to the accomplishment of lawful objects by unlawful means, or to the accomplishment of lawful objects by unlawful means, or of unlawful objects by lawful means.

2. That capital has no legitimate right or claim to combine for the purpose of using its power to the end of depressing the price of labor below its just and reasonable value, and that, on the contrary, to do so is a blunder to its own disadvantage and a crime against society; and that among the evil results of such a course must be the diversion to other channels of the labor unduly depressed, and the stagnation or destruction of the business in which it is so depressed and from which it is driven.

3. That, on the other hand, labor has no legitimate right or claim to combine for the purpose of using its power to the end of exacting from capital a higher price of wages than its just and reasonable value, and that to do so is allow a curies must be the increase of laboreers in the particular business (attracted by the under componentation) or the paralysis or destruction of the business which yields or destruction of the business which yiel rules and make the appropriation bill, appropriating money for public expenses for the next fiscal year, the special order for to-day at 12:30 o'clock.

Mr. A. Fulkerson said that a few days since he asked that the committee appointed to report some legislation on the debt question. of which he was chairman, be discharged; that the House refused to do. He now asked that he personally be discharged from said

Mr. Wise: "May I ask why the gentleman wants to be discharged-he an advocate of the committee, I believe? I would like to know what change has come over the spirit of his

Mr. Fulkerson said he did not feel called upon to explain why he wished to be discharged : but he now considered the committee of no use, as the Governor, without consultation with the committee, has sent in a special message calling for the appointment of a sides, he wished to be personally free to act in the matter regardless of what the Governor, or the Lieutenant-Governor, or the Legislature, or anybody else might think. Further, Mr. Fulkerson said, the reason he asked that he be discharged from further attendance upon that committee was because the joint committee had the question of the debt under consideration, and also a plan which they thought would be effective if adopted. But in the midst of their consideration of the question the Governor had thought proper to inaugurate, without any consultation with the committee or Legislature, as far as he knew. a scheme which looked to the appointment of a commission clothed with no power to settle with the creditors, but simply to inform them as to the condition of the State and sentiment of the people; that about the same time the Lieutenant-Governor, representing another branch of the Legislature, has introduced into the Senate a bill to create a commission. &c., by which he saw the Governor and went one better by providing for the reopening of the question of the payment of West Virginia

The scheme of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor is antagonistic to that under consideration by the committee. The committee never for a moment entertained the idea of surrendering the question or yielding one inch in the fight, believing as they did that the State had power to regulate its own finances in its own way without let or hindrance from any court or government. He further said that the scheme of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor-appointing a commission-was one which had never amounted to anything but delay, and that it was surrendering the question for the present. "I had learned," he continued, "that when the white flag was raised and flag of truce sent in that it was in violation of the rules of war for another gun to be fired pending the truce. If this commission is appointed nothing could be done towards forcing a settlement until the results of that commission are known." He desired to be placed upon the floor untrammelled by any committee, so that he could take a position on this question that would suit himself and carry out the wishes of the people and pledges of the party as he understood them; that the bondholders were bet-ter informed on the debt question than
